"You wouldn't necessarily think of it as sheer at first glance, but the voile material keeps it translucent," shares deMañana. So if you're looking for something more intriguing than sheer white, this pick from Marigold Living might fit the bill. The superthin, periwinkle chevron pattern of these voile curtains reads like a solid, which pleasantly masks their semisheer quality. But what deMañana really loves is the woodblock print found at the hem, featuring floral vines in coppery caramel and pastel purple hues.
