

“Sometimes designers want you to throw out everything, but Celerie and Samantha were happy to reuse some of my old things”

few of Nabi's favorite pieces, including a mirror, a candelabra, and a bench from Mexico-based Casamidy, which just so happens to be a favorite source of Kemble's. "Sometimes designers want you to throw out everything, but Celerie and Samantha were happy to reuse some of my old things," says Nabi. "They never made me feel like what I had before wasn't nice."

"The majority of our work is maximalist," adds Kemble, "so it was a breath of wonderfully fresh air to look for fewer accessories that are really strong. When you don't have as many items, you have to make sure that everything resonates and has a function."

New kid-friendly additions include custom sofas upholstered in a white Perennials outdoor fabric in the living room and a custom banquette in the kitchen that's covered in leather-like vinyl. "I love white," says Nabi, "but we host play dates all the time, so our home needs to be practical." In fact, her housewarming party included several mothers and children from school among the guests. "It was funny to see the kids 'skating' around this perfect white space in their socks, stopping only to grab strawberries," recounts Kemble, who joined the festivities. "There's a sense of airiness throughout the apartment that you don't often experience in New York. It's like you're breathing something different." 🌟

Dreamy Lairs
(OPPOSITE) The Cisco Brothers settee in the daughter's bedroom is covered in Arabel Fabrics' Comfy in Powder Pink. (ABOVE) The RH bed in the master bedroom is dressed in Matouk linens. The sconces are from Visual Comfort & Co. and the night tables are from Chelsea Editions. See Resources.

Photographs by Stephen Karlisch

8/9

The RH bed in the master bedroom is dressed in Matouk linens and a Marigold Living coverlet. The sconces are from Visual Comfort & Co. and the night tables are from Chelsea Editions.

