Color trends come and go, and green is no exception. The difference? Green ubiquitously blankets nature with its vegetation's vast variations. Even after plantings pause during months of brisk air, the lush color extends its presence on Christmas trees and swags of spruce, pine, and fir during the holiday season. Right now, green is in demand and has nudged the design world to embrace a spectrum of deep shades—from moss and sage to emerald and hunter green—that add a vibrant kick to all sorts of eye-catching merchandise. Christmas' key color doesn't have to be the go-to for all things gift. But decorating with green is a great way to draw upon the memories we associate with the jewel tone. As you plan the tablescape for a holiday dinner or scheme a new decorative plan for interiors, consider green and its ability to maintain timelessness.
